Cameron's Difficulty.

The Republican fight now in progre i Pennsylvania is a scramble for power and not a light for principle. The struggle against the machine as controlled by juay is in favor of the machine to be controlled by Martin or Hastings or by whomever is the new boss to be selected. It is generally considered, however, that luay's overthrow will have the effect of purifying politics in the State. The combination against Quay may be able to establish their machine just as firmly is the Quay-Cameron machine was established, but the chances are against their doing so. It is generally believed here that Camron's desire to become the Republican candidate for the Presidency upon a silver platform has aided in bringing about the state of uffairs that now exists in Pennsylvania. There was probably never the slightest chance that be could with a conference upon county and towncarry the Republicans of the State into ship organization. the silver camp, and his attempt to do so has, it is thought, weakened him in the State and has also burt Senstor Quay. Unless it is demonstrated that Cameron can carry his own State he ceases to be a possibility in the race for the nomination, even if the silver men determine to put a ticket of their own in the field Cameron has been talked of by the silver men because they have hoped that he would go to the Republican convention with a solid delegation from Pennsylvania behind him. Now that this seems out of the question it is doubtful if the use of his name can be of the slightest

The Midsummer Holiday number of The Century, the issue for August, will have an article appropriate to the vacation season, "Fox-Hunting in Ken-tucky," written by John Fox. Jr. Mr. Fox is a member of a well-known Blue-Grass family, and has written several romances of the Kentucky mountains. He not only describes the sport as practised in his native State, but does so will be recognized in that region for their local truthfulness. Although foxhunting had been indulged in for many years, it was somewhere about 1855, says Mr. Fox, that the hunters discovered that their bounds were chasing some thing they could not catch. A little later a mule-driver came through Cumberland Gap with a young bound that he called "Lead." The Jenior Senator Quay is a great leader in Adams county as well as in all the other counties of the State. His friends here appear to be as determined a class of men as the Republicans have ever had to deal with. They are for Quay first, last and always and the amount of work which they appear to be doing indicates that they may send Quay delegates from this county.

The other Republicans, presumably anti-Quay people, are apparently actuated by fear rather than by loyalty to a

WHY THERE SHOULD BE NO TRUCE IN THE WEED WAR. HOW WEEDS NTHE WEED WAR. HOW WEEL ARE PROFAGATED AND HOW THEY ARD SPIREAD BROADCAST—INSUFFICIENCY OF INDIVIDUAL EFFORT.

July and August are the months when weeds spring up on every available space and the danger is that the efforts for their destruction may be relaxed as soon as the crops are well started. Too much down the weeds, and it does happen that a thrifty and quick-growing crop will give weeds but a small chance to live but there are so many kinds of weeds that it is difficult to escape them, as the conditions that are unsuitable for some kinds are very favorable for others. There are farmers who follow a regular routine of work. They cultivate their corn a certain number of times, giving it two or three "workings" until it is "laid by," and will not go on the field again with a cultivator under any circumstances. It is on such farms that the stocks of weeds are propagated, from which seeds are scattered over the adjoining farms. It should be instilled into the minds of such farmers that there is no time for "laying by" the corn if there are even but a few weeds among the rows. A single weed left standing may cause a thousand to spring up next

The seeds of most of the weed families retain their vitality for years, and if buried this year by the plow may be brought to the surface when the land is again plowed. The vacant lots of cities and towns contribute largely to the supply of weeds, the light seeds not only being carried to great distances by the winds, but also by the tops of the rail-road cars, which distribute them hundreds of miles along the railroads. The seeds of vegetables, and of wheat, clover and grass, purchased and brought on the farm, too frequently contain the seeds of weeds, because it is impossible to detect them or remove them from the seeds intended for crops. The manure heap is also a receptacle for matured weeds, the seeds being distributed over the fields when spreading manure, and the fence corners and other locations contribute their share in keeping the farmer busy the greater portion of the growing season in the effort of destroying weeds and saving his crops. In all communities will be found at least one or two farmers less progressive than their neighbors, who will not completely destroy weeds, and if they damaged none but themselves, all would be well, but they entail hundreds of dollars loss on others and make farming a very disagreeable occupation to some. Laws would, no doubt, prevent this condition of affairs to some extent if properly enforced, but the most reliance should be placed on organized effort for the complete destruction of weeds. Nearly all of the familiar weeds are annuals, and can be kept down and exterminated in a year or two if they are destroyed when young, and in many cases, where the mower can be used, the work is easy. The most profitable plan is to grow crops that require the hoe, harrow and cultivator, and not to omit cultivation until the land is entirely free of weeds, at the same time rooting out all weeds growing on locations upon which the cultivator cannot be used.—Record.

Country Roads. The economic value of good roads is not as thoroughly understood by most farmers as it ought to be. No better topic for discussion, at a Grange or Farmers' Club meeting, could be taken up than this. There are two aspects to the question worth considering. We have often referred to the wear and tear upon horses, harness and wagons, and the waste of valuable time, caused by bad roads. This is a point of no little importance, for the annual loss from this cause, in keeping it neat and tidy. When weeds, bushes, and rubbish of all kinds are allowed to encumber the roadside the whole neighborhood is made to look untidy, and the effect is to lower the value of all the property bordering upon the road. A stranger driving along such an ill-kept way is most unfavorably impressed. The natural interence isthough it may be a mistaken one-that the farmers of the vicinity are an unthrifty lot, among whom it would be very undesirable to settle. On the other hand, a well-made roadway, passing between borders of grass or cultivated land, and all kept in trim order, attracts the eye at once, and one involuntarily concludes that here is an enterprising, thrifty, prosperous community. And the conclusion would not be far out of PROFITS OF THE FARM.

Most farmers have to do the best they can, not as they would wish. And whether they get their rightful share of the farm profits depends not only upon their ability to work and plan, but also upon their ability to market what they have to sell, as well as upon the carefulness of the wife also. For instance, the farmer may be very careful about feeding his cows, keeping them clean, etc. But unless the housewife supplements his close attention with the same care of the milk, cream and dairy utensils, his extra work amounts to but little. We have now in our mind's eye a farmer who receives five cents above the market price for his butter, from the fact that his customers found that the quality was the same throughout the year, and as good as any to be found in market. Now this extra five cents is all profit, and he is entitled to it. Nor is that all profit, for when once a customer is obtained it is usually for a whole sen-son, and a market thus opened for other produce. In this way much time is saved in marketing, and middlemen entirely dispensed with. It brings him in the cash, and thus enables him to buy where he can get the most for his money, which is another profit he reaps. This is not fancy farming, but legitimate business and free from all competition. Country dealers, on the other hand, generally be produce in a lump and sell good and bad together at pretty much the same price without allowing anything for quality.

article in order to get his full share o the profit on anything he has to sell. NOTHING is so strong as gentleness: nothing so gentle as real strength -

So it is always best for a farmer to es-

The proessor maintains that a rotation of crops ends to increase the chances of rendering the raising of farm crops more sucessful, and therefore more rensunerative than any of the old systems of field management. The object aimed at in rotaion is to regulate, as far as possible, the chemical and physical conditions of the soil, having reference to the kinds of crops to be raised. Any judicious system of rotation assigns to each crop that promises it the most advantage in the existing conditions of the soil .- Massa lousetts Ploughman. The Household. To disinfect clothing, mix one teaspoonful of the milk of sulphur to one pint of water, sprinkle the clothing lightly with this, then iron it with an iron hot enough to volatilize the sulphur without burning the clothing.

Sulphur may be kept in small muslin bags in drawers and cupboards, as a protection against the ravages of the red

For preventing vermin in bird cages, tie a little sulphur in a bag and suspend it in the cage. Sulphur is said to kill all kinds of fungus in man, heast or plants For diphtheria, put a teaspoonful of alphur in a wineglassful of water, stirring it with the finger so that it will mingle with the water. After it is well mixed, let the patient gargle it, and after gargling swallow a small quantity. If the disease is too far advanced for gargling, throw some sulphur into the throat by means of a quill, which will cause the fungus to sbrink, after which the sulphur gargle may be used.

A sulphur wash is an excellent remedy for roughness and pimples on the skin. Make it by taking one ounce of sulphur flour and pouring over it one quart of boiling water; allow this to stand and steep for twelve hours: then apply it to the skin three or four times a week. Traces of sulphur are found in both the vegetable and animal kingdoms, as well as in the 'mineral. Oftentimes the disagreeable odors which some plants give forth are due to the sulphur which they contain. Sulphur is used for bleaching; also making gan-powder and matches. In case of being very near to premises or apartments where there is diphtheria, the simplest, yet effectual mode of fumigating is to drop a little sulphur on a hot stove, or on a few hot coals carried through the rooms. In this way the spread of the disease may be stopped.
